St Peters Wharf Chiswick Mall W6

Artists Julian Trevelyan and his wife Mary Fedden lived in Durham Wharf next door to what is now St Peter's Wharf. Julian owned the land there, and towards the end of the 1960s had the idea of developing a group of houses for artists, designers and architects. Michael Patrick, then head of the Architectural Association School, was an old friend and became the architect for Julian's scheme. In her biography of Julian and Mary, José Manser describes the principal four-storey buildings as 'spacious in concept, each having a large studio and ample living accommodation'; Patrick also included a single studio and a small one-storey flat. These were all set around a communal garden beside the river. In 1974, Julian set up the Trevelyan Arts Trust, which sold the properties on long leases to artists such as Hugh Cronyn and Evelyn Gibbs, who lived there with her husband Hugh Willett, then Director of the Arts Council. St Peter's Wharf was built as live/work spaces for artists and that concept continues to this day.
